Help make UNC a safer place by speaking up

Updated: 03/06/13 12:42am

TO THE EDITOR:

As the representatives of the faculty, staff and students of the University we want to jointly speak on the recent series of events surrounding sexual assault allegations at the University.

Let us make one thing clear from the outset: We cannot and must not tolerate sexual misconduct of any kind on this or any other campus.

The situation we are facing is truly tragic on all sides and one that never should have occurred.

From the news stories and our own meetings, we know members of the Carolina community have endured physical, mental and emotional suffering. No one at UNC deserves to go through such trying experiences.

We must have a safe and supportive environment for all. Until the day that there are no sexual assaults on this campus, we cannot stop pushing for safety and justice for all. This includes safety not only for anyone who has suffered sexual assault, but also for the accused and for those charged with upholding our system of self-governance.

And justice cannot be served unless victims of sexual violence come forward. We know this is a tough request even under the most ideal conditions.

In order to make this possible, we must create an environment where victims feel safe so they will be willing to tell their stories and prosecute their abusers. Doing so is imperative for us all.

While we cannot address the specific allegations and claims of this most recent case to be brought before the Honor Court and made public by Landon Gambill, we would like to speak more broadly about the honor system at UNC.

We have a 100-year tradition at Carolina of students having the autonomy to determine what shall and shall not be appropriate behavior in our community. We want students to be able to have a voice. A strong system of student governance, including the work done by the honor system at UNC, helps make that possible.

It should be possible to keep such student autonomy, and have a dialogue about and resolve reported cases of sexual assault. We wish to ensure both of these things happen. However, the case before us indicates that there are clear dissatisfactions with and misconceptions of the honor system.

There have also been allegations that the administration is taking an active retaliatory role in this case.

While we emphatically believe this to be false — it is a student-to-student case — we need to address all of these concerns in order to have a meaningful conversation about what we should do as a university.
